Présentation of Biguglia City :

Biguglia médiéval capital

Vincentello d'Istria appointed Count of the island of Corsica in 1407, made Biguglia his capital, where he ruled both Balagne and Cap Corse. At the time Biguglia with its port, the pond Chiurlino, was considered a symbol which could claim to have had the subject of Corsica.

The common Biguglia whose name evokes the rocky outcrop overlooking the road from the plain Nebbio (Aguglia then guglia in Low Latin means the needle tip) has played a prominent role in the history of Corsica the Middle Ages.

Headquarters of the powerful family of BAGNAIA, based first in the vicinity of the ancient city of Mariana, whose stronghold stretched from the valley of the Golo in Corsica Cape, she was with her castrum, a refuge for people, a place of worship with its church dedicated to Sant'Andrea and an important economic center. Wisely, the lords of Biguglia had placed themselves under the authority of Pisa. Later, the convent and hospital of St. Francis attracted the rulers of the richest families. The present village still bears traces of its rich past, it contains the foundations of the castle and is dominated by the ruins which can get an idea of the importance of the site.

We especially attracted the most famous episode, that the power exercised by Vincentello of Istria from 1407 to 1432, the viceroy of Corsica on behalf of Alfonso of Aragon, fighting against Genoa, which manages to capture and then the run. But we must not forget that powerful people who want to consolidate their power Counts had been his purpose to govern from Biguglia and uncle Vincentello, Arrigo della Rocca was proclaimed in Biguglia Count in 1376. It is therefore natural that the first Governors Biguglia Genoese chose to lead their struggle against the feudal lords whose Bagnaia who, having submitted to Luchetto Doria, continued the fight. This is Biguglia that is exercising the power of justice (the vicarage) whose actions allow us to discover engaging characters as Andria's Barber.

We know that subsequently chose Genoa Bastia and the castle were dismantled in 1489, but the long history of the fortified settlement which is the frame of the old village gave Biguglia his character and allowed him to retain its originality. In modern times, the development of the plain, the organization of the fisheries of the lake known throughout Italy has allowed supplies to the nearby city and therefore its development. These activities explain the ease of families in the eighteenth century to build elegant houses in the center of their fields.

This brilliant past, today we can find traces, bits of Roman road linking the Mariana Nebbio, the ruins of the first Church of St. Andrew, the foundation of the Castle, built architectural elements of buildings has More recent memories of a capital a modern city.
